

New policies to attract foreign talent to China

Summary:

Aiming at enhancing existing policies to attract foreign talents to the city, the Shanghai Administration of Foreign Experts Affairs and other relevant authorities recently rolled out a series of practice guidelines, including extending application of a policy launched in late 2020. This facilitates the conversion of foreign exchange by remunerated foreign talents in the Pudong New Area with minimum document requirements, and now covers all districts of Shanghai. In addition, an immigration policy was launched on 1 March 2021 to expedite procedures relating to employing foreign talents in Shanghai. At the same time, China embassies and consulates overseas have recently announced relaxation of requirements on visa applications for foreigners who wish to return to China.

Background

In order to accelerate Shanghai's development into a global hub for technological innovation, the city has taken the lead in implementing a series of policies allowing companies to attract foreign talents to Shanghai. In particular, special attention should be paid to the 4.0 version of the "Virtual" Approval Policy adopted for Foreigners' Work Permit applications in China.

To facilitate the smooth implementation of these measures, the authorities will gradually establish a database to record incidents where false declarations have been made by enterprises and foreign individuals for Foreigner's Work Permit applications. They will conduct investigations on enterprises and individuals that provide false declarations for these applications.

➤ Reducing document requirements for foreign currency conversion for foreign talents with Fast Pass in Shanghai

Starting March 1st, 2021, financial institutions in Shanghai can now process foreign exchange purchase and remittance requests (e.g. for salary remittance) made by foreign talents who meet the following document requirements. ## ➤ Measures announced by China's embassies and consulates overseas on relaxing visa application requirements for foreigners to return to China

- Foreign passport holders whose family members are Chinese citizens or permanent residents of China, including spouses, parents, children and other close relatives who live together (siblings, grandparents and grandchildren), may submit visa applications to travel to mainland China for the purposes of reuniting with family, taking care of the elderly, visiting relatives, attending funerals or visiting critically ill relatives
- Holders of valid APEC business travel cards may apply for business visa (M type) by presenting the original valid APEC business travel card and the invitation letter issued by the inviting party in mainland China

KPMG suggestions

With the gradual improvement and stabilization of the epidemic situation in mainland China, Shanghai has taken the lead in implementing more open policies to attract foreign talent to the city. KPMG believes that the relevant authorities will continue to introduce policies to enable high-end foreign talent to more conveniently work or start businesses in China.

Before employing foreign personnel, KPMG recommends that enterprises make the following assessments to ensure that the foreign talent can arrive in China and take up their post as soon as possible:

- Assessment of the nature of the enterprise
- Assessment of whether the policy on expediting the employment of foreign talent in Shanghai is applicable

As China's overseas embassies and consulates continue to issue policies to facilitate visa applications submitted by foreigners for visits to mainland China, KPMG recommends that enterprises and foreigners keep abreast of the latest developments in the policies and their impact so as to make timely arrangements for visa applications and entry procedures into China.

KPMG will continue to closely monitor the above policies and detailed operating rules to provide enterprises and foreign individuals with timely professional insights and recommendations. We welcome inquiries from organizations and individuals and can provide professional advice on policy interpretation and practical guidance.
