Counterparty due diligence: Turning information into intelligence

Counterparty due diligence helps to gather wide range of information about an individual or a legal entity with whom you are planning to associate or have an existing relationship.

Counterparties - critical for business

Organisations are expanding globally and conducting business with individuals and companies in different geographies. This necessitates the utilisation of counterparties such as vendors/agents, business associates, channel partners and customers. While these counterparties are critical for the growth of an organisation, they also expose the organisation to various unforeseen risks.

Need to know your counterparty

Not knowing who you are dealing with can expose your organisation to various risks, including:

- Bribery and corruption
- Organised crime
- Money laundering
- Fraud
- Counterfeiting
- Risk of defaults

Due diligence on counterparties has become even more important as enforcement of regulations, such as the US Foreign Corrupt Practices Act (FCPA) and UK Bribery Act, have made it mandatory to implement a counterparty due diligence programme.

Risks of inadequate due diligence:

Due diligence on counterparties is one of the best practices companies can adopt to mitigate the reputational and business risks emanating from third parties. Inadequate or lack of due diligence can expose organisations to:

- Reputational and regulatory risks
- Non-compliance with anti-bribery and corruption regulations
- Non-compliance with Know Your Customer (KYC)/Anti-Money Laundering (AML) norms
- Costly investigations and remedial programmes
- Wasted management time to deal with investigations
- Negative publicity and reputational damage
- Potential criminal/civil penalties
- Increasingly large fines, including sanctions against covered individuals personally.

KPMG can help you

Being among the market leaders in India, we carry a deep understanding of conducting thorough due diligence through published sources and on-ground data collection, in order to identify issues of potential concern.

Did you know?

- Indian fraudsters are younger and initiate acts of fraud much earlier in their careers, compared to their global counterparts.
- The increasing usage of technology in enabling these frauds which is consistent with the trend of perpetrators being younger in our country. Many of them are at the manager and staff level.
- Sixty-one per cent of colluders are either non-employees, or are employees who work with people who are not. Some of them are former employees. This is a dominant trend in India, where 77 per cent of the colluder groups comprised of outsiders (20 per cent were purely external while 57 per cent were a combination of two, and only 23 per cent of colluders were purely internal.)
