Italy - COVID-19: Reinforcement of Current Measures until 31 January 2022

Italy's government published a new Ordinance issued by the Minister of Health on 14 December 2021<sup>1</sup> extending and reinforcing the current coronavirus/public health measures until 31 January 2022, aiming to mitigate the effects of the coronavirus and help prevent its spread. (For prior coverage of Italy's coronavirus-related actions, see GMS Flash Alert 2021-237, 16 September 2021.)

There are also travel restrictions in place, most notably for certain countries in southern Africa.

WHY THIS MATTERS

In order to battle the fourth wave of coronavirus, Italian authorities have reinforced the current measures in place aiming to tighten restrictions for arrivals from both EU and non-EU countries. To deal with the ongoing emergency, the new Ordinance extends and confirms the restrictions on movements for individuals coming to Italy.

Different measures are provided depending on the country of departure and countries visited immediately before coming to Italy.

The extension of the public health measures and the travel restrictions (discussed below) will affect employers and their globally-mobile employees – especially business travellers – doing business in Italy in terms of disruption, inconvenience, new procedures and requirements, and changes to travel plans.

Individuals travelling to Italy and employers sending employees into and out of Italy should stay abreast of the latest travel restrictions and should consider consulting with their travel agents and/or immigration counsel when planning their travel. In light of the current, fluid situation, it may be prudent to delay non-essential travel.

Travel Restrictions for EU and Non-EU Countries

People who are unable to present a green COVID-19 certificate will be required to present a negative swab test and undergo self-isolation for five days at the end of which it is mandatory to take a swab test (molecular or antigenic).

The Passenger Locator Form (PLF) still applies.
